Today, translation has established itself as a powerful tool for communication. Not a single area of life is devoid of its influence-- be it education, media or administration. It is the need of the day. This book highlights the interdisciplinary character of translation and discusses all the complexities involved in translation. It explains the models of the translation process as propagated by Peter Newmark, Eugene Nida and Bathgate and covers three important theories propounded by Catford's linguistic theory, Newmark's functional theory and Nida's equivalence theory in detail. The book also lays down guidelines for translators to improve the quality of translation. It is meant for the undergraduate students of translation studies and postgraduate students of English, Applied Linguistics, and English and Comparative Literature.
