When the wife of wealthy hedge fund owner Gregory Breckenridge disappears, the police suspect him of having her killed in order to marry his mistress. So Breckenridge hires Harry Brock to find her.

Harry locates a professional “skip tracer,” Caedmon Rivers, to help him find Afton Breckenridge. The information that Caedmon collects convinces Harry that Afton is still alive and is systematically cashing out all her investments. But the evidence against Breckenridge mounts when the police receive a letter seemingly written by Afton, stating that if she disappears, Breckenridge has killed her.

Harry and Caedmon find more evidence that Afton is alive, but someone is determined that they will never share that information.

Afton appears, briefly, determined to save her husband’s life and to help Harry prevent her own murder. But before he can act on her information, Harry and Caedmon are driven by a firestorm of bullets into a forest where they must fight for their lives.
